

‘AfL is working well in some departments, but how do I roll it out to the whole school?’

ASSISTANT HEADTEACHER

‘What about behaviour management – is AfL going to make things better for me?’

KS3 TEACHER

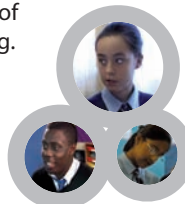

‘How does Assessment for Learning fit in with the new QCA ‘big picture’ of the curriculum?’

HEADTEACHER

This inspirational DVD-based training package features students of all attainments taking greater responsibility for their own learning. Teachers and the students themselves reflect insightfully on how Assessment for Learning (AfL) has positively influenced their classroom experience. Featuring Paul Black, Emeritus Professor of Education at King’s College London.

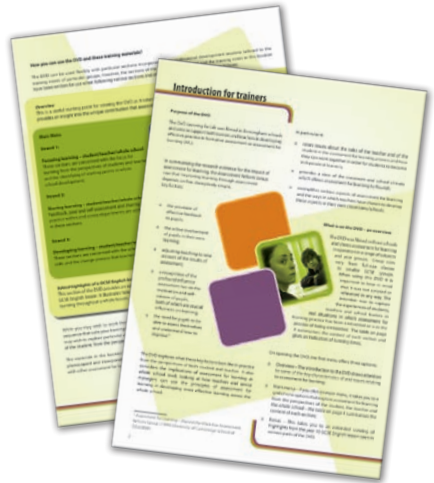

Learning for Life:

- explores Assessment for Learning (AfL) in secondary schools within real lessons, combining pupil, teacher and 'academic' comment into an informative commentary
- reflects on the AfL process from student, teacher and whole-school perspectives
- considers changes to student and teacher roles, and the way students become more independent – and more effective – learners
- includes a flexible DVD menu to enable trainers to tailor sessions to the needs of particular groups
- is both for those new to AfL, and those already down the AfL path but needing some ideas – and reassurance – to develop the approach still further.

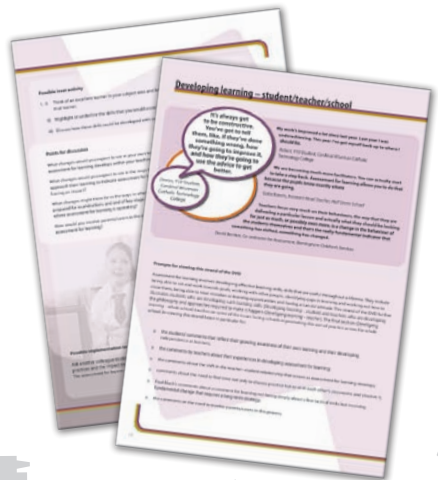

Learning for Life will:

- allow you to view embedded AfL practice as you watch real lessons by teachers in other schools
- support you in linking theory and practice, and in having a better understanding of the principles behind AfL
- give you an opportunity to watch and analyse an extended lesson, to explore how AfL can drive your own teaching and planning
- provide you (in the accompanying booklet) with section prompts, inset activities, photocopiable training resources, and suggested approaches for implementation.

‘I’ve always got good results by standing at the front and just teaching. Has this approach got anything to offer me?’
